Isaac Newton, a mathematician, physicist and astronomer, was born in a small English village on 4th January, 1645. He was more interested in books than the family business of farming. He was sent to a grammar school, which enabled him to then go to university at Trinity college, Cambridge. He studied the scientific and philosophical writers that were revolutionizing the world of learning and was rewarded with a professorship at the university. (It was at Cambridge that Newton produced most of his famous works. In his most influential book, Mathematical Principles of Natural Philosophy, he described his three laws of motion and the law of gravity. His law of gravity explained what had been a mystery to the astronomers of the day: how planets stayed in orbit and did not just spin off into space. Mathematical Principles of Natural Philosophy is generally accepted as the foundation of modern physics, but Newton's, fame does not rest on one book. Newton dominated the scientific world of the late 17th and early 18th centuries. At that time, Newton built the first reflecting telescopes, became a member of parliament, was the warden of the Royal Mint, and was elected president of the Royal society, the world's oldest scientific academy. In 1705, he received a knighthood for his services to knowledge, becoming Sir Isaac Newton. Newton lived a long life, dying at the age of 84 on 20th March, He was obviously a genius.
